The profits of his colton and here, but also the means to cultivate it, and he will be the more ready to cast his lot with us. To many it may appear that the time is yet at hand for "new departures." So though the planter who, for years, picked his colton and looked to the West for his stores. Happily he has changed his mind, and can now meditate upon his folly with the calm satisfaction that it will deliude him no more. This change, we are happy to believe, has been brought about largely by persistent efforts of the press, which, in and out of season, pointed out to the farmers of the South has entered upon the light road to prosperity.
